BROBECK ACQUITTED.

Law says he did not murder Peter Hansen.

An Interesting Trial lasting four days, in which Fifty Witnesses were examined.

At the Supreme Court, opened here on Tuesday morning, there were many cases brought before Justice Harvey, who presided. There were seven prisoners in all. Brobeck, the accused murderer, and these were brought from Fort Saskatchewan by the police on the noon train Monday. They were fettered in pairs at wrist and ankle, and formed a dismal procession marching along the streets from the train to the cells of the court-house where they were locked up.

Brobeck was held for immediate trial while the other six prisoners were arraigned and committed to jail again to appear at the March assizes. Bail was accepted in three or four other cases, John Flavell accused of theft, offering bail in his own behalf, which was accepted.

This was the initial court in the new building. The court room is nearly square with three large windows on each of the east and west sides. The judge's desk is in the centre of the south end. Immediately behind his desk is the door to the judge's chamber and on each side are doors leading to other rooms. The north end of the room has three double doors in the centre, and a door at each side. The room has a newly finished appearance which does not inspire that feeling of awe which a person feels upon entering the stone and oak court houses of the older provinces; and where also the dim light even at mid-day adds to that solemnity of feeling. On the contrary the new court-room was quite bright and, but for the character of the proceedings, even cheerful. The light from the side windows falls on the polished panels and doors and the white plaster with pleasing effect.

When the case of Brobeck was called there was a stir and a buzz of excitement. The prisoner entered the court between two of the tall, red-coated police, who guarded him to a high indifference behind his counsel, Mr. Hyndman; they taking a chair on each side of the prisoner. A dock has since been made and the prisoner afterwards, whenever in court, sat therein.

Brobeck is a stalwart man, by no means ill looking. Of course long imprisonment had told upon him as shown by his pale face, but his face is not heavily lined, and in other circumstances might wear a pleasant look. He was smooth shaven, had straight, black, shiny hair, and keen, gray eyes. His favorite attitude was to lean forward on his chair with chin on hand. He listened closely to every word of evidence given by every witness with his eye. Probably there was never a man in the dock before who kept such an unvarying expression through a long and anxious trial. His imperfect knowledge of English may partly account for the prisoner's earnest attention, it being necessary for him to follow the witness for one who is in perfect command of the language.

Brobeck wore blue overalls and smoked, with a fawn-colored outer coat. The smock buttoned up close under the chin, and he had no collar or tie. He wore coarse heavy shoes.

After much challenging, the following jury was chosen: H. Longson, W. Paterson, T. Towers, S. McConnell, J. H. Smith, J. Cole.

C. M. Macdonald and D. H. McKinnon appeared for the prosecution and J. H. Hyndman for the prisoner. When the charge was read that Olaf Brobeck, on or about the night of the first of August last, did feloniously and with malice aforethought kill and murder one Peter Hansen, and the prisoner was asked what he had to say in answer to the charge, he said "Not guilty" and emphatically shook his head.

Mr. Macdonald opened the case by saying that all the crown evidence would be circumstantial, there being no direct evidence to bring forward. But circumstantial evidence was often taken as conclusive, else many guilty men would escape the law. They would show that the two men had left town together; that prisoner had been with Hansen when the prisoner was last seen alive; that the prisoner had told different stories of his movements subsequent to the tragedy; that he had human blood-stains on his clothing; and that the wounds and shot taken from the skull of Hansen corresponded in size with that found on the premises of prisoner. They would call many witnesses to prove these points and he hoped the jury would take careful note of the evidence and endeavor to follow it closely.

The first witness to be called was Mr. Dumas, a Frenchman; a Laclede even as late as 1905. There was a stranger who stopped at his place all night July 31st. Man had a team and wagon. In the morning the man left, and witness thought he went after a binder. Witness had found a body on the trail on Aug. 8th, and had come to town and given warning. Did not know the dead man.

A number of witnesses were called, Clarence Stoe, Thos. Gaetz, Dr. Denovan and others, to describe the appearance of the body. Gaetz recognized the body as that of Hansen. The body was badly decomposed, and the arms were extended above the head as though body had been dragged by the feet. There was a black overcoat under the head, and this was soaked with blood. The pants pocket on the right hand side was turned inside out and was empty. From other pockets were taken a key, a knife, three handkerchiefs, a small account book, and an envelope, which were in the court room marked as exhibits and were recognized by witnesses. A hat was found at some distance from the body which was also recognized as Hansen's. The coat on the body was drawn up to the shoulders, showing that the body had been dragged some distance. Dr. Collison testified as to condition.

Red Deer Real Estate Barometer for 1906.

INDICATIONS show that there will be sudden advances in town and Farm property in this locality. Red Deer has up to the present had a steady increase in property values. In Edmonton and Calgary prices have gone up by leaps and bounds. There is a limit to all things, and it looks as though it would be nearly the limit in some places. Red Deer's time is coming. It is beginning now. Already real estate men of Calgary and Edmonton have bought property in Red Deer to reap the profits sure to accrue to the present purchaser. Why not Red Deer citizens take advantage of the coming increase of prices. You say, "If we had known we would have invested two or three years ago," but the increase in the next two or three years will exceed the increase of the past. "Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day" applies to real estate investments just now. Before the spring opens up with its rush of building and railway development is the time to act.

ADVERTISING.

In reply to a shoe manufacturer in one of the eastern provinces, who complained that American shoes were getting a better and wider name than those of Canadian make, Mr. Fielding chairman of the tariff commission advised more use of printer's ink. He meant that Canadian manufacturers and merchants should do more advertising.

Advertising is a business principle, and by means of it, men once in humble positions, have come to be merchant princes. As instances we might cite the late Marshall Field, John Wannamaker and Timothy Eaton. They have grown by advertising.

One trouble is that a great many business men look upon advertising as more or less a gift to the newspaper; forgetting that it is a straight, common sense business proposition; and one which, properly conducted, should return to the advertiser ten for every single dollar paid for that purpose.

What is paid in advertising is not a gift to the local paper, but is an investment of capital which should pay the advertiser as good dividends as though his money had been put in real estate or other property. It is a mistaken idea to suppose that the ordinary advertisement if well written is not interesting; that people have to be deceived or lured or dragged into reading advertising matter. Good advertising is good reading, and interesting too, for the people to whom it is addressed. If you have shoes or hats or coats or groceries to sell, that fact is interesting to, and will be read by, the people who need any of those things at that particular time. There is an art in writing advertisements it is true; but the main thing is to tell in a straightforward way what you wish to say. A man in our office not long ago was speaking of advertising; and in reference to two or three business men of this town who are noted for writing interesting advertisements, he said, "Those men have taken a course in advertisement writing." Inquiry proved that they had taken no course whatever; that they merely study the times, and adapt their advertising to the needs and wishes of the public. Therefore their advertisements are always interesting reading.

If we might offer a word of advice on this subject, it would be this:—Be specific in your advertising. Too general advertising is a universal mistake. If you have shoes to sell at $2 say so; if you have a parcel of land for $500 say so. Give a specific price on a specific line, avoid general statements. Read Eaton's full page as it appears in the Daily Telegram, Winnipeg and you will see at once how particular things at particular prices are specified. That should be a great object lesson to advertisers. Again, the advertiser should talk shop. It is wrong to suppose that you must get a funny picture, or a line from Shakespeare, or a big blank space, in order to get the public interested in your business; nothing of the kind; we can see those things elsewhere. Talk shoes, talk dishes, talk real estate talk your business and nothing else; and you will talk customers into your shop, and money into your pocket.

Another point: change your advertisement frequently; adapt it to your weekly needs; don't leave that old stereotyped cut in the paper week after week, but get something fresh, and change the copy too. People will begin to say: "I wonder what Mr. So-and-so is up to this week; I see he is keeping up to the times; his advertising; Oh there is just what I want!" And the man who will look for your advertisement will likely become a customer. Volumes could be written on this subject but we will add only one word more. The man who takes his advertisement out of a paper for personal spite or political bias is, surely, first cousin to the one who cut off his nose to spite his face.

We notice by reference to our lists that many subscriptions have expired; and we are notifying all such to that effect. We respectfully urge upon any person receiving notice from us as to expiration of subscription to avail himself of our fine clubbing offers. Brobeck, the story told by Brobeck is again improbable, since he says Hanson got in with two men who were going toward Blackfield. Very likely what Dorcas Brown may have thought of as a black coat. Another witness saw in the early morning a team, (afterwards found to be Hanson's) going very fast. Would this prove they had just been loosed? If so, the they filed in again and returned, through Mr. Longson, their foreman, a verdict that the charge had not been proven, and his Lordship said to Brobeck: "You may go, you are a free man." For a moment Brobeck stood under the shock of his verdict, until his countenance slowly returned to its normal color. Then he quickly bowed, first to his Lordship.

Wedding Festivities.

Valley Centre is noted for its social entertainments. Wednesday evening January 31st, 1906 one of Alberta's beautiful winter's evening. Nature furnished all that could be desired in welcoming the bride and groom Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kaiser. In response to invitations given by the brides mother Mrs. Puzey. About forty guests assembled to take part in the Wedding Feast prepared by the bride and bride's mother Mrs. Puzey.

The guests commenced to arrive about 7 o'clock and were received by the bride's mother and bride. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white cashmere and wore a wreath of orange blossoms sent by her aunt from England and received a number of useful and beautiful presents.

The tables were beautifully decorated with Chinese Lilies and heavily laden. The bride's cake was the choicest. A beautiful supply of tropical fruits were furnished and when all had partaken of the bountiful supper the night was spent with instrumental and vocal music, recitations, dancing and different games, one of the notable features was the general sociability as every one tried to make everybody enjoy himself. We would not do justice to the occasion without making a special mention of the music furnished by Messrs McKinley and McLean on violins accompanied by Mrs. Gretton on the guitar. Mrs. Gretton sang and played several beautiful selections which were very highly appreciated. Miss Purdie sang a beautiful piece. Messrs Jacobson and Bolze sang a selection in German. Mr. Judd sang a selection and Mr. McKinley sang a number of suitable pieces. Mr. McLean and Master Leo Brown favored us with recitations. Mr. and Mrs. Gretton rendered great assistance with music and calling everyone thoroughly enjoyed himself so the daylight dawned upon them before the first guests started for home and all wondered why the night had been so short. Mr. McLean was chosen to express the congratulations from the friends to the bride and groom which was done in a very interesting and able manner and was replied to by the groom in the few well chosen words. A vote of congratulation was tendered the bride's mother for her unbounded success in making the occasion one of the most pleasant events of their lives and all departed wishing the bride and groom a happy and prosperous life.

Mr. and Mrs. Kaiser will reside on their farm. Those from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. McLean from Red Deer, Mr. and Mrs. Jacobsons, Mr. and Mrs. Gretton and Mr. Brack of Bloomfield.

man upon the ground just rousing from sleep. They could not swear positively the man was Brobeck though it was quite light; on the contrary, Dorcas Brown, one of the girls, was positive that the rig by the binder had a black oil cloth over it. But no person who saw Brobeck and Hapson leave town together saw anything of a black oil cloth in the wagon. If this was Brobeck, then his story is false; if not Brobeck, one has any idea who it was. If it were the murderer, and yet not Sergt. Hotterington not seeing Brobeck's guilt for granted and not following other clues.

Mr. Macdonald spoke for about two hours. He was not at his best, owing to a severe cold, but his argument was strong and connected; and, founded on better evidence, would have been convincing.

His Lordship impartially summed up the evidence, he addressed to the jury being favorable to the prisoner.

The jury retired. In 45 min.

Business Failures of 1905.

Dun & Co.'s annual report shows that, as compared with the record of 1904, there was a slight increase in the number of business failures in Canada last year, but that the amount involved was not so large. The number of insolvent estates was 1347, as compared with 1246 in 1904. Last year the liabilities of the insolvents amounted to $9,554,639, and the assets to $9,552,006, and in 1904 the liabilities were $11,394,117 and the assets $9,555,575. Says the report:

Manufacturing returns show a striking improvement, 259 failures for $3,129,262 comparing with 307 defaults and $3,136,908 liabilities in 1904. The increase in number occurred in the trading class where 1039 suspensions compared with 914 in the previous year, but liabilities were almost identical, $6,552,821 against $6,577,788.

Other commercial defaults, not properly included in the two principal divisions, were 10 in number and $172,576 in amount, against 25 failures for $370,421 in 1904. The only notable increase in liabilities occurred in the banking division, where five banks suspended owing $799,708, against only two in the preceding year with liabilities of $30,749. The difference was provided by two heavy failures in Ontario and Nova Scotia. The most striking change in commercial failures appeared in the province of Ontario, where total liabilities of $2,417,540 fell far below the $3,839,695 in 1904. Canadian losses in 1905 were smaller than in any year for over a decade, with the exception of 1903 and 1898.

In our recent election for Councillor we may have mentioned parenthetically that this was the fourth time the same candidates strove for the coveted position and every time the indomitable Chris was ditched.

Messrs Michener and Carsen on the popular Real Estate men Red Deer have disposed of a section of choice farming land in this locality to Mr. Tyndell a recent arrival from Idaho.

It is gratifying to know that now with our present Council the making of good roads is fully assured. We understand that special attention will be given the Blind line and 5th meridian which is the principal route to Red Deer. By doing this the many people of this district will be afforded full access on a level highway to the best markets.

Considerable interest was taken in the election for Councillor on Saturday of last week. The ratepayers turned out in full force 77 of them having voted. The candidates chosen were L. Martin and C. Johnson. After the votes were summoned up it was found that L. Martin was the victorious candidate. A feature of the election was the voluntary sarcastic speech given by E. Clement on behalf of the defeated candidate but the speaker was tendered a rude and disorderly hearing.

Seed Grower's Association.

The above engraving represents the medal which is to be given by the Canadian Seed Growers Association for the best collection of seed, at least five kinds and one bushel of each kind at the Seed Fair to be held by the Red Deer Agricultural Society on Feb. 14th next. The medal is a fine one, made of sterling silver with the raised seal in gold. Along with the handsome prize given by the Agricultural Societies this should be the means of bringing out a good competition.

Association is a national organization with headquarters at Ottawa. Its purpose is the improvement of Canadian crops by seed selection. Seed improved by the method of selection required by the Seed Growers Association can be registered as pure-bred seed the same as pure-bred stock is registered. Quite a number of farmers in all parts of Canada are joining this movement and are finding it a very profitable undertaking. There is room and great opportunity for registered Seed Growers in Alberta.

[Unfortunately the engraving referred to has not arrived from the seed department, but as the subject itself is important to farmers we insert the notice without the cut.]—Ed.

Hockey.

The match between Calgary and Red Deer Intermediates on Wednesday evening last was an interesting exhibition of the game.

During the first half it looked to be chiefly Calgary for they seemed to be running swift for our boys. During this part of the game the visitors scored two goals.

In the second half however our fellows woke up and in a most surprising manner turned the tables in all except the scoring. In the swiftest piece of hockey played on the ice this year the Red Deer team kept the puck in front of the visitors goal nearly all the time but were not fortunate enough to score. As the victory remained with Calgary.

Hats! Hats! Hats!

It was not our purpose to write an article on human headgear but simply to remind you of the presentation of that striking comedy entitled, "Three Hats" by local talent on to-morrow evening at the Opera House.

Don't miss this. The entertainment will be unique and the proceeds are to be devoted to the hospital.
